In 1991, Joy Jones wrote one of the most controversial editorials about relationships between Black men and women anywhere.

Her message lives on today.

“Why Are Black Women Scaring Off
Their Men? A Fighting Spirit Is Important
-- but Not at Home”

Published in Washington Post, 1991

The nation responded with vigorous praise and disdain.

The responses were overwhelming. From the educated to the emotionally inflamed, responses accused her of defiling the spirit of women, while others reveled in her courage to share such a deep observation that simply admonishes women to listen to themselves.

In 1994, the editorial birthed this introspective book, which introduced the compelling viewpoints from Joy Jones, on why Black women are ‘manless.’

"Third Ear" grew out of an overwhelmingly high impact editorial published in the Washington Post in 1991. The book has since earned Joy invitations to speak on radio talk shows and commentaries in newspapers across the country.

Ultimately American Images, a Chicago publishing company, released the book in 1994 and it is still going strong.

Over a decade later, Joy Jones still receives contacts, in her Washington DC office, from women responding to the editorial.

Joy Jones is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Detroit with a B.A. in Communication.
